

Stellingen

1. Moving care is like moving a tree – there are roots involved.
2. There is no ‘right’ place to fit the ‘right’ care. Care and place become ‘right’ – or not – together.
3. Place-making must be a democratic activity; we are all place makers.
4. Healthcare analysis should include sociological understandings of architecture for care.
5. Places of care may be fractured, multiple and folding; materiality (alone) is not place.
6. Science is nothing but perception. (Plato)
7. Analyses are only ever partial and the result of specific interpretations.
(Lupton)
8. All readings are also mis-readings, re-readings, partial readings, imposed readings, and imagined readings of a text that is originally and finally never simply there. (Haraway)
9. Discomfort is productive in research: a researcher should always be uncomfortable with her data, ideas, and conclusions.
10. Research questions are only very temporary indications of interest in something.
11. What I write is smarter than I am. Because I can rewrite it. (Sontag)
