

Follow-up after Involuntary Mental Healthcare: Who cares?

Follow-up after Involuntary Mental Healthcare: Who cares?

André Wierdsma

André Wierdsma

The glass staircase is an eye-catching feature of Apple's high-profile stores. The stairways and glass bridges are made possible by recent advances in glass technology. The back-stage technical details are of little interest to most visitors: perhaps only managers and researchers will study the structure to see how it was achieved. In contrast, the front-stage experience is everybody's business. These stairs may serve as a metaphor for the inevitable complexity and much-needed transparency of follow-up after involuntary mental healthcare.