Contents

Foreword ............................................. v

I The Elements of Development Policy
1 Introductory ....................................... 3
2 The Creation of the General Conditions for Development .................................. 4
3 Awareness of Development Potentialities and Advantages .................................. 5
4 Basic Government Investments ................................................................. 6
5 Measures to Facilitate and Stimulate Private Activity ................................... 7
6 Development Policy Under Varying Circumstances ......................................... 7

II The Essence of Programming
1 Nature of General Programming ................................................................. 9
2 Rough Outline of General Programming ...................................................... 11
3 Projection of a Country’s Markets .................................................................. 16
4 The Role to be Played by Individual Projects ................................................ 20
5 Avoidance of International Duplication ......................................................... 24
6 Types of Programming to be Applied Under Varying Circumstances ............... 25

III Appraisal of Projects; Public Investment
1 Need for a Uniform Method of Determining Priorities ................................... 29
2 Simple Methods Sometimes Applicable ......................................................... 31
3 Consequences of Projects ............................................................................. 33
4 The Use of Scarce Factors ............................................................................ 35
5 Ultimate Aims Pursued .................................................................................. 36
6 The Case for "Accounting Prices" .................................................. 39
7 National Product (or Consumption) Test ...................................... 41
8 Examples of Application ................................................................. 42

IV Methods by which to Explore, Appraise and Stimulate Private Investment
1 The Search for Sound Projects ..................................................... 46
2 Role to be Played by Market and Cost Analysis: the Choice of Industries ................................................................. 47
3 Choice of Technology ................................................................. 49
4 Methods of Stimulating Private Investment:
   a Protection, Subventions, Tax Provisions .................................. 50
   b Programming, Information, Encouragement and Demonstration ........................................................................ 55
6 c Financing Facilities: National and Foreign .............................. 58
7 d Minor Facilities ........................................................................ 61
8 Public vs. Private Activity ........................................................... 63
9 Lessons to be Learned from Failures .......................................... 67

V Annexes
1 The Capital Coefficient ................................................................. 70
2 Fundamental Disequilibria in Underdeveloped Countries and Accounting Prices ..................................................... 76
3 The National Product (or Consumption) Test ............................ 79
4 Some Figures on Investments in Transportation as a Percentage of Total Investments ................................................. 90

Index ......................................................................................... 93