CONTENTS

Foreword ............................................................ VII

Contents .............................................................. IX

Summary .............................................................. XI

1. The Contribution of Economic Analysis to the Design of Economic Policy ........................................... 1
   1.1. Objective of this study (1); 1.2. Summary description of the economic process and its determinants (3); 1.3. The logic of economic policy; the contribution of economic analysis to the design of economic policy (6); 1.4. Aims of economic policy (11); 1.5. Inconsistencies in individual and collective aims (18); 1.6. Some suggestions as to aims (21); 1.7. Means of economic policy (24).

2. Economic Models .................................................. 27
   2.1. Scope of models (27); 2.2. Some conclusions from models (33); 2.3. Survey of models used as examples in this book (38); 2.4. Closed static models (39); 2.5. Closed dynamic models (42); 2.6. Open static macro-models (44); 2.7. Open static micro-models (45); 2.8. Open dynamic micro-model (47); 2.9. Group-of-economies model (47).

3. Quantitative Policy: Regulating the Position within a Given Structure; (I). Closed Economy ...................... 48
   3.1. Nature of problem; practical approach so far mostly used (48); 3.2. The logic of quantitative economic policy (50); 3.3. Provisional solution; efficiency of instruments (53); 3.4. Appraisal and amendment of the solution (59); 3.5. Methods to regulate employment and monetary equilibrium (61); 3.6. Main problems of development policies (65); 3.7. Example of sector policy in a closed economy: transportation (91).

4. Quantitative Policy (II) in an Open Economy, and in Sets of Economies ............................................. 96
   4.1. Methods of regulating employment, monetary equilibrium, and balance of payments equilibrium, in an open economy (96); 4.2. Multiple-target policies for open economies (114); 4.3. Example of sector policy in an open economy: agriculture (159); 4.4. Quantitative economic policy where policy-makers are many: (1) international quantitative policy (143); 4.5. Quantitative economic policy where policy-makers are many: (2) pressure groups (146).

5. Qualitative Policy: Changing the Structure within Given Foundations .................................................. 149
   5.1. Qualitative policy (149); 5.2. Quantitative restrictions (153); 5.3. Built-in stabilizers (157); 5.4. Changes in pricing and taxation schemes (160); 5.5. Monopolies (166); 5.6. Decentralization or centralization in administration (172); 5.7. Appraisal of investment projects (178).
CONTENTS

6. Reforms: Changes in Foundations ................................................. 186
   6.1. Reforms (186); 6.2. Social security schemes (188); 6.3. Minimum incomes; guaranteed minimum employment (191); 6.4. Equalization of opportunities (193);
       6.5. Monetary reforms (197); 6.6. Centralization of production decisions (200); 6.7. Industrial democracy (203); 6.8. Nationalization (203); 6.9. Summary and conclusions (206).

7. Utopias: Misconception of Human Nature? .................................. 210
   7.1. Introductory (210); 7.2. Complete freedom (211); 7.3. Complete State regulation (211); 7.4. Productive co-operatives (Associations) (213); 7.5. Abolition of money (213); 7.6. Complete equalization of incomes (214); 7.7. Completely free services (214).

8. Some Remarks on the Organization of Economic Policy ................. 216
   8.1. Number and nature of agencies and their tasks (216); 8.2. Planning of economic policy (218); 8.3. Co-ordination and decision (219); 8.4. Execution (221); 8.5. Supervision (222); 8.6. International economic policy (223).

Appendices ................................................................. 225
Subject Index .............................................................. 274
Author Index .............................................................. 276