

Georgios Papadopoulos studied Philosophy of Economics at the London School of Economics and is pursuing a PhD at the Erasmus University. In 2008 & 2009 Papadopoulos was a researcher at the Jan Van Eyck Academy in Maastricht and in 2012 was awarded the Vilém Flusser Residency by the transmediale festival in Berlin.

The book develops a theoretical framework for the study of fiat money, employing a synthesis of original institutional economics, the state theory money, and an account of social ontology based on collective intentionality and constitutive declarations. Money is defined as an institution that functions as an abstract standard of value that reconciles the social antagonism around the constitution of the system of prices. In this context economic value has also a political dimension, relying on the authority of the state, and so does the institution of money.

The Ontology of Money

Georgios Papadopoulos

The Ontology of Money

Institutions, Power and Collective Intentionality

Georgios Papadopoulos